

STEEL

Member, California Board of Equalization

A successful businesswoman and longtime taxpayer advocate, Michelle Steel represents more than eight million Californians on the state Board of Equalization. She was elected to the position in 2006, becoming California's highest ranking Republican woman. A signatory of the Taxpayer Protection Pledge, Steel is committed to opposing all new taxes and tax increases. Her extensive public policy experience also includes two presidential appointments and service on several committees, commissions and boards. She and her husband, Shawn, live in Palos Verdes and have two children.
